1. Prior to early May 1954, numerous Polish officers were observed on the bank of Streitzig See (lake) near the old castle in Neustettin (P 54/M 90). The billeting area with a park which was guarded by Polish soldiers was enclosed by a high board fence. It was presumed that an officer candidate school was located in the castle, but there was no proof of this. Polish officer candidates with their conspicuous uniforms were not observed in the station area. 25X1
2. In October 1953, Polish soldiers who wore army uniforms with red service color were observed at potato-harvesting in the village of Zuch (P 54/M 61), northwest of Neustettin. They came on trucks from the former Infanterie Kaserne on the northwestern perimeter of Neustettin. In the spring of 1954, this installation still quartered Polish army troops who wore red service color.
3. Prior to early May 1954, the Neustettin slaughterhouse which had a Polish management was alternately operated for the Poles and the Soviets. Soviet troops with trucks from the Gross Born (P 54/M 88) training grounds regularly picked up fresh meat at this installation. The neighboring sausage factory also made regular supplies to Soviet troops in Gross Born. Prior to the May 1954, washing was done only for the Soviets in the plant of the former Schwarz laundry on the market place. Prior to the spring of 1954, the estates at Raddatz (P 54/M 80), Juchow (P 54/R 79) and Neuvalm (P 54/M 70) were still run by the Soviets and were exclusively used to make supplies for Soviet troops. A number of Germans was still employed at these estates.

Comment. UNCODED The observations mentioned in the present report coincide with previous information as to all essential points. It is believed that the castle houses a headquarters but not a school. 25X1
